You are of the Community

By so much as you give to it out of your life something Sempervirent.

We have all heard no doubt the celebrated report by one Finnegan, of the derailing of his train. Here is one that appeals to the eye as that does to the ear.

In a children's hospital which often numbered among its patrons' members of the colored race, the night nurse often found her little patients uncovered. The following is a transcript of her report deposited one morning upon the superintendent's desk.

COMMUNITY

Vol. 1. BOULDER CREEK, CALIFORNIA, MAY 7, 1921. No. 4

WHERE WE LIVE

We have no doubt all noted with interest and pride the many imprevements taking place this spring, up and down our community. It is as if some excess of the vital forces of spring had welled up within our very home and houses; budding forth additions and porches, blossoming forth in new, clean, attractive colors. On some streets the thing seems epidemic, so as to change very much for the better the whole aspect of that part of the town. In keeping with this local improvement of home environment is the soon to be completed link of highway construction between Ben Lomond and Big Trees. From their very familiarity these things seem commonplace to us. For this very reason and because they are typical of many unnoticed yet important facts of community life. we wish to focus attention upon them.

First, of course, we wish to voice the community's appreciation of those of our citizens who, not only now but in times past, by the improving and beautifying of home surroundings, reflect upon the whole community a permanent and tangible value. We wish them to know that we appreciate this value. But above and beyond this material enhancement, we hope to grow in the appreciation of the more intangible yet more important value embodied within these things—the real human wealth of community spirit and community pride.

We count it a truism that every person, given opportunity of time and circumstance, will somehow express his character in his environment. How much better one ean judge a person's character when meeting him in his own environment. It is the overlapping of these character-ful environments and their interaction, that give being, quality and form to that form of human life which is the community. And the late world unpleasantness has very forcibly emphasized the fact that a real nation is not an aggregation of individuals, but of organized co-ordinating communities. Not only does the nation depend for its material resources upon the proper functioning of its communities; but far more for the qualities of its intelligence and ideals—its morale. The measure then, of a nation's wealth is not the extent of its territory nor the perfection of its political development, not the volume of its commerce nor yet the size and grandeur of its cities, but just this seemingly commonplace thing, the well-being of its component neighborhood communities. Contrawise the true measure of national calamity, distress or weakness is the degree in which community life is thereby undermined and disorganized. Lop the leaves and branches, hollow out the center of a tree and it will yet survive; but even a shallow girdle cut through the bark into the cambium layer, drstroys it as effectually as uprooting it. The community is the cambium layer of the nation. The nation is, in the large, in it's elements of strength as well as of weakness, what in miniature, just such communities as ours is. Human life expresses itself most characteristically in communities. When, therefore, the present day ready accessibility of so-called world news leads us to scorn as provincialism any notice of mere local events. we are really, in a sense, putting the cart before the horse, forgetting that the nation exists for the community rather than vice versa. The importance therefore of an event is not measured by the big noise—by the number of thousands of miles the noise has traveled nor by the millions of ear drums that have vibrated to it, but rather by its nearness to the vital area of human life.

If, then, these things be so, it is for us to turn anew, each to his individual environment with new sense of its uniqueness, of its dignity and importance realizing that by so much as we here fully express character worth while, we most effectually influence community and national progress in a corresponding direction.

Community Commended by Educators.

Last week we expressed our appreciation in "Community" of the words of encouragement and praise received from our local friends. We reiterate this in the current issue as this encouragement has been ever increasing with each issue.

Since Communfty's initial appearance her pages have gone far and wide. The leaders in educational thought in our State have taken cognizance of our venture and what they have written us makes us indeed strive the harder to accomplish the goal and eager to share our achievment with the who'e community.

Here are some interesting letters viewing our venture from an educational point of view.

The following is a letter from Mrs. Josephine Shute, a prominent California educator, a member of a committee on educational research. Associated with Mrs. Shute were Prof. C.E.Rugh, Prof. Alexis Lange, Prof. Lewis M. Terman and others of note.

She says in part. "You can scarcely realize how greatly pleased I was to recieve the copy you sent me of "Community"; you people of Boulder Creek High School are surely in the advanced standing in matters educational. Just one step further and you will be among the leaders. How best to take that step is shown in a thought, perhaps best expressed in Joseph Kinmont Hart's work 'Democracy in Education' page 372: The democratic problem in education is not primarily a problem of training children; it is the problem of making a community within which children cannot help growing up to be demacratic, intelligent, disciplined to freedom, reverent of the goods of life, and eager to share in the tasks of the age. A school cannot produce this result; nothing but a community can do so.

I wish your "Community" and its community all success. You can help greatly by simply repeating the thought of the quotation; by developing each separate detail of it. The work that I have been priveleged to help in during the last three years makes me long for every community to be awakened to a knowledge of what must be done to make our schools, and homes and our nation a success"

The high school commissioner, A.C.Olney writes in part, "Please accept my congratulations on the first issue of your paper!"Community". I have read it rather carefully and have enjoyed it. I wish you every success in the adventure".

Very cordially yours,

A.C.Olney.

The cast of characters for several plays have deen selected from among the High School students and the few weeks will be busy ones in prepfor the future presentation of the plays. Each little group of actors and actresses is prophesying that his particular production will be the best. This ought to add zest to the finals.

Save Our Redwoods

Mrs. Anthony is in Boulder Creek and is investigating the progect of saving the redwood natural gate-way that has for so many years marked the entrance to Boulder. Mrs. Anthony has already consulted with men in position to know the facts on this important question and the possibilities of saving the trees are good if the Boulderites show interest and stand together. The initial step to save these trees will soon be taken and a petition circulated for signatures.

It is a matter of great importance from the stand point of scenic beauty to our town that these grand old trees which for centuries have stood at the entrance of our village be protected

Woodman, spare that tree!
Touch not a single bough!
In youth it sheltered me,
And I'll protect it now.

That old familiar tree,
Whoes glory and renown
Are spread o'er land and sea,
And wouldst thou hew it down?

Woodman, forbear thy stroke.
Cut not its eath-bound ties;
O, spare that aged oak,
Now towering to the skies!

Old tree! the storm still brave!
And, woodman, leave the spot;
While I've a hand to save,
Thy ax shall hurt it not.

WEED SEED

Blind are we to the innards of things;
Clutching the present, crushing its wings.
Tardily careful of full grown tree;
Blindly careless of seed to be.
By angle of vision measuring size;
Denying to heart the use of its eyes.
Little reck we of the trend of an act,
Till home it is brought -- a cold dead fact.
List to the tale of a pitiful deed,
Growth of a common suicide seed.
This is the lift of a supercilious brow.
This is a thought in an avid mind.
That sprouts from the lift of a supercilious brow.
This is the rumor of kindness blind,
That grows from the thought in an avid mind
That sprouts from the lift of a supercilious brow.

Children playing about a subway exit in a southern section of the city noted the non-arrival of the morning work-train on schedule, and reported the matter to a workman. Investigation after some necessary excavation disclosed a wreck near the tunnel mouth. The train consisting of but a single car was a total wreck damaged beyond repair. The only passenger, the engine driver, was apparently instantly killed, so the cause of the wreck could not be accurately ascertained. However, circumstantial evidence seems to show that a curved iron implement had been maliciously placed across the track in such fashion as to jam the whole car against the roof of the tunnel. To the authorities the whole dastardly business has the look of an I.W.W. or anarchist plot.

The following description of the unclaimed body of the unfortunate victim is appended for the assistance of relatives or other interested parties in the identification of the remains:

The individual was short, not very much over four inches. His complexion was dark, eyes black, nose rather prominent, teeth in excellent condition with no fillings. He was apparently of the colored race though his hair was not kinky. He was well dressed, and though he wore no jewelry he had on expensive looking fur-lined gloves and a fur overcoat. His pockets were empty but an examination of the lining disclosed the fact that the coat was a product of the well known furriers, G. O. Pher. Interested parties should call at this office for de tail.

EXTRA — As we go to press it is reported that the body has been stolen by a prowling individual identified as one F. E. Line. The whole matter of the wreck and body is thus engulfed in a deep and dark mystery
